Race Analysis: Showtime Maggie won well in a similar race two starts back and now lobs in a similar race that looks to shape favourably. Glen Cahill - fresh off four winners at Orange this week - sticks with her and she may not end up as far back as she has done in recent starts. Maggie should be ahead of Santolini in the run after winning well on the Riverside track at Wagga last start, gunning down her rivals with good late splits. Boudvillain riding is a positive sign and she's likely to get a tow into the race on the back of Showtime Maggie. The Glen as solid on resumption at Cootamundra and should be better for that effort. Easier race now and he has the speed to work across from the tricky barrier.

Race Analysis: Keen to be with the Archibald-trained Lord Wootton off a strong performance at Hawkesbury last time out. He went 1400m to 1800m there at just his second start and stuck on gamely after the tempo slowed mid-race. He wobbled about a bit late in the race, so the blinkers going on should help him out. He has stacks of upside, he possesses some early speed and with his upside, he makes plenty of appeal. Ring Of Fire has done nothing wrong this campaign, finishing strongly from the back in a good race here last time out. We were with him there and things just didn't work out well, ending up last on the turn from barrier three... Out to 2000m now doesn't look an issue with how he finished off there, though he'll need to raise the bar. Couldn't gun down the winner last start after having every possible chance in the straight. Kept ticking over with a recent trial and commands respect again.

Race Analysis: This is a great sprint race with those at the top of the market doing battle many times. Teylu has a 2-2 record when head-to-head with Keikoku but has jumped shorter than Keikoku in three of those 4 meetings. That trend looks the same today, with Teylu just plugging away in the wet going at Moruya at their last start. Has some ground to make up on Keikoku from that effort, though he'll be better with that run under his belt and he can play a leading role. Keikoku is likely to be on the back of Teylu, tracking his every move with Ramsbotham getting into the clear on straightening. As the stats show, there's not much between those at the top of betting and where they're position now seems about right. Action King was at the top of betting in the Black Mountain when knocked off by Keikoku, though this shapes a little differently. The claim comes in handy but the other two may have more wiggle room in their ratings at this stage of the campaign. Iowna Benz has beaten both Teylu and Keikoku over this track and trip. Admittedly, the other two didn't have much luck there, but this doesn't appear a very high pressure 1000m dash and with her early speed, she'll have the tactical advantage from the outset.

Race Analysis: Thorsten is shaping as one of the better bets on the card following a strong front-running victor at Newcastle last start, showing speed and proving too good over the 900m journey. Things look to shape nicely for him again here and if the track is wet, that won't be an issue as he won on relatively soft ground last start at Newcastle. Lightly raced with upside and can keep the ball rolling. La Stiava is a scary proposition, but which La Stiava is going to turn up? She disappointed last start with the jock blaming the track at Wagga despite being rated 'Good'. She did well to knuckle down and score at Queanbeyan two back, though the form out of that race never really worked out with the second and third horses regressing in their ratings at their next start, both in easier company as well. Happy to take her on with Thorsten, though she is scary at her best. Helluva Teen is racing well without winning and will give a sight again despite the wide alley.

Race Analysis: The gap between Mighty Myrtle and Canny Queen is too big in early betting. Canny Queen beat home Mighty Myrtle last start at Warwick Farm and actually meets her better at the weights for beating her last time out. Drawing out wide probably suits Canny Queen better than barrier 1 for Mighty Myrtle, though Myrtle continues to knock on the door and a drought breaking win is around the corner. Acheson is the 'dunno' runner in this race, overacheiving in Saturday grade last start and now looking beautifully placed in this event. The stable has been open in their hunt for the Little Dance and early signs point to this being a 'tweener' with bigger targets on offer. Cando Attitude is another 'dunno'. Out to the mile now may help her improve, but she did stop pretty quickly here last start.

Race Analysis: Blue Monday was solid late first-up on the Kensington track and this will suit her much better. She turned in a solid figure there but couldn't edge out Our Huntress who beat her home at 30-1 despite being next to each other in the run. That was Our Huntress' first run for the stable and her prior form around this distance range suggests she has another gear to find. The midweek race they come out of looks a strong form reference, particularly with both of those mares having room to improve in their profiles. Famoso is racing well and looks to get a lovely run on the map. He deserves his place at the pointy end of betting. Barbarossa is an interesting one. He was solid at Kembla last start on a good deck from the front and he does have a strong 1400m run in the G3 Ming Dynasty not far down his form page. Will need a bit of luck but his last start keeps him on notice.
